INTRODUCTION.

The author of this catalogue died suddenly at Torquay on 6th May 1926, while the work was passing through the press; and consequently all but the first 160 pages lost the benefit of his final revision. He had, however, not merely completed the catalogue in manuscript but had also compiled the index; so that it only remained to see that the text was correctly printed, and this duty has been most efficiently performed by his widow.

The compilation of this much-needed catalogue was the last of many services rendered by Mr. Hill in the elucidation of the history of British India, and a brief sketch of his career will not be out of place. He belonged to the third generation of a family which had given its best energies to the country in which he was born; for his grandfather, the Rev. Micaiah Hill, went out to Calcutta in 1822, and founded the London Missionary Society's station at Berhampore two years later; while his father, the Rev. Samuel John Hill, succeeded to the charge of that mission in 1856 and (with one break caused by the Mutiny and by subsequent leave to England) conducted it until his death in 1891. Samuel Charles, the second son of this devoted missionary, was born at Berhampore on 16th July 1857. He was sent home and educated at the Blackheath School for the Sons of Missionaries, University College School, and University College, London, from which he took the degrees of B.A. and B.Sc. at London University. Appointed to the Bengal Educational Service in March 1881, his first post was that of Professor at Dacca College, and for the next 18 years he went the usual round of appointments, as professor or principal of various colleges and inspector of schools. Then, in March 1899, he was selected to take charge of the Imperial Record Department and Imperial Library at Calcutta—an appointment in which he was confirmed, after the retirement of Sir George Forrest, in November of the following year. To the duties of his new post he applied himself with the utmost energy and success, organising and improving the work of the department in many directions, and producing a number of valuable publications. Of these may be mentioned his biography of Claud Martin (1901), his abstract of the Foreign Department records for 1756–62 (1901), his list of the Europeans in Bengal at the time of the Black Hole episode (1902), Three Frenchmen in Bengal (1903), and especially his monumental work on Bengal in 1756–57 (Indian Records Series, 1905). In July 1904 an offer of the post of Director of Public Instruction for the Central Provinces drew him from Calcutta to Nagpur, and he spent the remainder of his Indian service in that capacity.

Retiring under the age-limit in July 1912, Mr. Hill settled in London and devoted himself to research work in his favourite studies. Besides making valuable contributions to the English Historical Review, the Indian Antiquary, Bengal Past and Present, the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, &c., he published Yusuf Khan, the Rebel Commandant (1914), and an analytical catalogue of the Orme MSS. in the India Office Library (1916). In 1920 he offered to undertake the present catalogue of the Home Miscellaneous series of the India Office records; and this onerous task occupied most of his leisure until his death. It may be added that the plan of the catalogue, as well as all the details of its execution, was left entirely to his judgment.

All his work was marked by a thorough and painstaking investigation of sources and a clear and masterly presentation of the facts. Although his knowledge was wide as well as deep, he never wrote to order, preferring to confine his attention to the subjects that really interested him. To other students he was lavish of assistance when applied to, and for this, as well as on more personal grounds, he will be sorely missed by a large circle of friends.

Had he lived, Mr. Hill would doubtless have supplied an introduction to the catalogue; and, in the absence of this, a few words must now be said about the origin and contents of the collection. The name itself is somewhat of a misnomer, for, "miscellaneous" though the series is, it is by no means confined to "home" papers, whether by origin or subject. This is due to an early deviation from the initial plan. When, in 1884, Mr. Danvers, the first Registrar and Superintendent of Records at the India Office, commenced to arrange the unbound documents in his charge, he seems to have planned a series of "Home Miscellaneous" (to correspond with the "Miscellaneous" sections of the "Factory Records" and "Marine Records") consisting entirely of papers relative to home affairs. The first 47 volumes more or less conformed to this plan; but thenceforward the scheme widened to include documents dealing with, and even originating in, the settlements in the East, and soon all pretence of confining the series to home matters was dropped and it became the depository of every document for which a suitable place could not be found elsewhere. The title, however, remained unchanged; and this it is not desirable to alter now, since the series is well known and has been often quoted as "Home Miscellaneous."

For the benefit of students who may wish to ascertain the source of a particular document, it may be well to mention some of the series which were drawn upon. First come the "Birdwood Papers," i.e. the seventeenth century documents upon which Sir George Birdwood reported in 1878, most of which went into the "Factory Series." Then we find (Volumes 93–190) the "East Indies" series, consisting of correspondence on Indian affairs received by the Secretary of State's Office from 1748 to 1784—a series which apparently was made over to the Board of Control upon its establishment. Later on (Volumes 457–79) is incorporated the collection known as the Wellesley Papers, comprising original letters from the Governors of Madras and Bombay to the Marquis. The earlier volumes have Lord Wellesley's bookplate, and presumably the collection was given by His Lordship to the Board of Control. Volumes 525 to 531 contain papers left by Mr. James Cumming, the head of the Revenue and Judicial Department at the India Board; these were purchased in 1827 by the Court of Directors for the sum of £400. Another large collection dealt with by Mr. Danvers was that termed the "Unrecorded Papers" of the Board, of which a register (on paper with the watermark of 1811) forms Volume 719 of the Home Miscellaneous Series, while an index fills Volume 720. This collection was split up, some of the documents going into such series as "Charters," "French in India," and various sections of the "Factory Records"; but most of them were distributed among the "Home Miscellaneous" volumes, according to subject. They may generally be distinguished by being endorsed in this manner: Reg. No. 2357. A further group took its origin from a collection of miscellaneous documents preserved in the Examiner's Department at the East India House, of which a register, compiled in 1804, is now Volume 716 of the present series. They then numbered 2,981 documents, but when a list of them was compiled in 1876 by Mr. (afterwards Sir Henry) Waterfield, only 378 papers were forthcoming, the bulk having been destroyed, it would seem, when the move was made to Victoria Street in 1860. At an intermediate stage the collection had been much reduced, and the remaining documents had been arranged by Thomas Fisher, a clerk in the Examiner's Department who had been appointed to this duty in 1814 (see my Guide to the India Office Records, p. vi), and hence they became known as "Fisher's Papers." These, too, Mr. Danvers broke up and dealt with according to subject; and many will be found in the series under review. They may be recognised by a double number, e.g. 1990 (268). The former number is that in the register of 1804; the latter seems to have been that given by Fisher at his revision. Other components of the "Home Miscellaneous" series were sundry volumes received from the Political Department, several old record catalogues and indexes, &c.; while the collection has since been augmented by papers presented to the India Office by various individuals.

Application for permission to consult the series should be made to the Superintendent of Records, India Office.

The collection is still a growing one, and Volumes 807-14 have been added since Mr. Hill's death. For the descriptions given of these, as also for the notes on pp. 535-6, the responsibility is mine.

Stuart (N.B.—pp. 589–601, An Account of Stuart's Military Services); pp. 611–4, Directors to Madras Council 14th April 1779, Stuart, in recognition of past services, to be appointed Second in command to Hector Munro if acquitted by Court-martial. N.B.—Stuart's case was beautifully complicated. Firstly, he being a King's officer, it was difficult to arrange for a Court-martial or enquiry of any kind in India. Secondly, if the enquiry were transferred to England it would be difficult to arrange for the presence of the necessary witnesses. Thirdly, it was difficult to define the charges against him in a way which could make them cognizable by a military Court, and lastly, his offence in arresting Lord Pigot under the orders of the Majority in Council involved the question as to how far the authority of such a Majority extended.
